

ABSTRACT

A method of conserving power in a WLAN receiver is provided wherein processing tasks that need only to be operated for a brief period of time during the reception of a received packet are enabled only during the brief period of time. The enabling includes providing multiple power control signals that are controlled by a state machine for enabling and disabling the processing tasks.